Something for the Workingmen to Remember.

It would be hardly possible to put the free trade case more clearly or more strongly. The arguments which President Cleveland uses are those which Mr Cobden used to employ forty-five years ago, and which any English free trader would employ now. They are purely free trade arguments, and as such we are very glad to see Mr Cleveland using them, though sorry for the popular infatuation which makes it dangerous to give them their right name.—London Times.

He discusses the principles at issue in the struggle and shows that he is a free trade candidate in everything but name. The reservation is an important one for American party purposes. The President feels compelled to characterize the attempt to brand him a free trader as a deception of his enemies. For all that, the electoral conflict now in progress is a conflict between free trade and protection, and nothing less.—London News.

The only time England can use a Celt is when he emigrates to America and votes for free trade.—London Times.

A Few Plain Questions

The Commercial continues to be very much disturbed because THE WHIG devotes considerable space to the free lumber clause of the Mills bill. The reason for its unhappiness is not hard to find however. Having placed itself squarely on record as opposed to the removal of the lumber tariff in language so strong that it cannot get around it, every word that it now utters in defence of that measure in obedience to the party mandate only subjects it to the contempt of the people of this section. In order to show how our contemporary has flopped around on this important question we invite attention to the following contradictory statements copied from its own columns:

(Commercial February 1888.)

The lumbermen of the State of Maine are not alone in their opposition to free manufactured lumber, as there is a strong opposition from Missouri, Kentucky, West Virginia and all the Pacific States to the placing of lumber on the free list. The high duty now collected by the Dominion of Canada upon nearly all the [illegible] manufactured of wood [illegible] by Congress. [illegible]

(Commercial August 1888.)

We will say, however, that there was a period of twelve years during which there was an "unrestricted importation of Canadian lumber," and not only was this not "disastrous to the lumber interests of Maine," but on the contrary during no other equal period before or since have the wages paid to men employed in this industry averaged so high or the [illegible] of the lumbermen been so satisfactory to all concerned in it.

If free lumber during the period referred to was so beneficial to our people as to cause our contemporary to think in August that it affords sufficient ground for an indorsement of the Mills bill, what did it mean in February just when it positively declared that free lumber from Canada would be "a gratuitous injustice to our people?" Was it lying in February, or is it lying to-day? It cannot ride both of these horses going in different directions at the same time. It knew all about this alleged season of prosperity in February, yet at that time it openly asserted that the lumbermen of Maine, Missouri, Kentucky, West Virginia and all the Pacific States were opposed to free lumber because it was an injustice. Does it suppose that the men who are engaged in lumbering and have made it the study of a life time would oppose the removal of the duty if the effects of the Mills bill would be to improve rather than destroy their business? The question answers itself.

As to the other declaration of the Commercial that "it is for the broadest reciprocity with Canada" that matter does not enter into the present discussion at all. It is not a question of getting anything from Canada, but whether we shall make Canada a present downright of what would be to her people a great blessing, namely, free access to our market. That is what a vote for the Mills bill means and it is for our people to decide whether they stand for prosperity in Maine or prosperity in Canada.

A Solid Protectionist.

The Commercial attempts to impeach THE WHIG'S interview with Hon. Archibald Linn. The fact that Mr. Linn has hung out a protection banner and intends to vote for Harrison and Morton is pretty conclusive evidence that he is in the "protection ranks," just as THE WHIG stated. What the Commercial believes or does not believe is of very small consequence, for as a matter of fact it does not know more than half the time where it stands on the tariff question. Evidence of this will be found in the contradictory paragraphs quoted from its columns in another place.

A Signal of Distress.

The free whiskey charge started by the Democratic organs was so ridiculous that it was promptly dropped by a majority of the papers but our contemporary has become so completely tangled up on the tariff question that like a drowning man it catches at straws. In its case the cry is simply a signal of distress. Anxious to divert attention from a subject upon which it contradicts itself every day it wants to get up a side discussion. As the Commercial is just now devoting considerable attention to what Mr Blaine said concerning the whiskey tax in his Paris interview we call its attention to another paragraph in the same interview. After referring to a revision of the tariff Mr Blaine said:

If such changes were made and the fortifying of our coasts was then undertaken at a very moderate annual outlay no surplus would be found after that already accumulated had been disposed of.

This shows the utter absurdity of the free whiskey cry. At a remote contingency the Republican platform favored the repeal of all internal taxes rather than to surrender any portion of the protective system, that is to say if the surplus was more than requisite for the wants of the government after the various suggestions, including ample provisions for coast defenses had been carried out, but as Mr Blaine says there would be no troublesome surplus when this had been done so that the treason out apprehension on the part of our contemporary is entirely uncalled for.

REVOLT!

Prominent Democrats Refuse To Speak at the Ratification Meeting.

Open Denunciation of the Free Trade Bill.

Woodbury, Avery, French, Abbott, Maguire, All Angry.

The Democratic party in this State is in serious trouble. The trouble is caused by the free trade policy of the President, and this policy has alienated nearly every one of the old leaders, the veterans who have always been accustomed to advise the young men and encourage them. These men are most of them too good partisans to show their bitterness by speaking openly. But they talk loud and angrily in private.

They will content themselves with silence and a refusal to help the campaign. It is their attitude which delays the holding of the Democratic ratification meeting. The party managers who have swallowed the free trade pill are in difficulty. For a long time it was doubtful if a ratification meeting could be held. Patrick Maguire warned the committee that it was dangerous, that an attempt to push free trade down the workingmen's throats would not go.

UNDER THE [illegible]

"We have got to vote for him this year, so as to be able to vote for a Democrat next year," says Maguire.

This sentence speaks the sentiments of half the Democratic leaders.

Judge Abbott is open in his denunciation of the President, and freely declares him undemocratic. The Judge's sarcasm is biting, and he has been heard to call Mr Cleveland pig headed in a far more graceful and forceful way than Senator Blair. Within three weeks Judge Abbott sent for Col Plympton and asked him to hold a meeting of the Butler Club so that he might speak what was in his mind. But the General advised delay. "It is best to wait," said he. When the right moment comes, Gen. Butler, Judge Abbott and Col. Plympton will all declare their open opposition to Cleveland. They admit it privately now. Two of them at least, will help Harrison this fall.

THOSE KINDERGARTEN STATESMEN.

Judge Abbott was particularly incensed yesterday morning when he read the manifesto of the kindergarten statesmen in the Young Men's Democratic Club. A deep scowl wrinkled his face. "There isn't a Democratic sentiment in it," said he to a neighbor, bringing down his cane with emphasis. It is said that Josiah Quincy wrote most of the address.

Judge Woodbury is open in his attacks on the President. There is hardly any adjective of contempt which he does not apply to his policy. The fishery treaty and the free trade bill are what arouse him particularly. Senator Gray of Delaware is reported to have said yesterday that he did not believe Judge Woodbury wrote the famous letter in which he [illegible] and [illegible] to England and Canada. Senator Gray would do well to call at the judge's office. He would hear things which the [illegible] would hardly dare [illegible] Judge [illegible] yesterday that Mr. Avery had refused to speak at this ratification meeting. Mr. Avery also [illegible] of Mr. Cleveland in private.

"I hear you are going to open the campaign with a speech on the fishery treaty at Gloucester, Colonel," said a friend to Col. Jonas H. French the other day. There were visible signs of horror and anger in the Colonel's face.

"Don't say that idea's mention it again," said he. "Some one will get hold of it and then they will actually propose it. Fishery treaty indeed! I ——"

But the rest of the Colonel's conversation can be left to Secretary Bayard's imagination. Col. French is the one man of the notification committee who did not go to Washington and tell Mr. Cleveland he had been renominated.

COL. FRENCH IS SAGACIOUS.

Col. French will not run for Congress in the Seventh District this fall. He hates the Administration too much, and he knows he could not, with all his money, secure an election there this fall.

Hon. Patrick Maguire will have to be dragged into the ratification meeting if he speaks. His idea of the situation was tersely summed up when he told the free free trade masters that he had enough to do to take care of the city government.

Col. Henry Walker, of whom Mr. Cleveland told the famous story of "one lung gone," says his other lung is seriously affected so far as this year's campaign work is concerned.

Ex-Mayor Hanson, of Fall River, E. R. Dean, of Brockton, Dr Rice, of Springfield, are all going to vote for Harrison. They are among the strongest men the Democrats have counted.

COVENEY WILL OBEY ORDERS

Col Coveney is mighty glad this year that he is a federal official. He will continue to obey Cleveland's letter to federal office holders in spite of the disrepute into which it has fallen at the White House.

City Clerk O'Neil is going to run for Congress in the Fourth District on the Democratic ticket. This has been settled. But he will run on a high tariff platform. He has said this positively to friends. He will vote the ticket, of course, under the circumstances, but the ticket he will work for will be O'Neil and Cleveland.

The Democrats who are on the inside are not surprised at the fact that the managers are sending off begging letters to outsiders for help to make a ratification meeting. They appreciate the stinging truth of the bait of yesterday's New York Sun.

The Democrats of Massachusetts are not fulfilling the promise they made when Gen. Collins was selected to preside over the St. Louis convention. They are not making an active, enthusiastic campaign for Cleveland and the old flag. They are not warming the heart of the country with their energy and inspiration. It is a shame that they should open the campaign with indifference amounting to paralysis.

In view of Hon Patrick Maguire's advice, perhaps the ratification meeting may be dropped quietly.

THE ILL-FATED STEAMER.

Further Particulars of the Danish Disaster.

The Stories of Capt. Knoth and a Passenger.

[illegible]

...ing forward I found the Thingvalla to be locked with another steamer, I did not then know. As I approached a man whom I afterwards found to be the [illegible] officer, jumped over to our deck. My steamer had cut right through his room where he was asleep and he jumped out of his bunk on to the Thingvalla's deck. It may have been two or three [illegible] four minutes before the engines were reversed and we backed off without delaying a moment. I went to quiet my frightened passengers who were crowded on deck and at the same time I looked after the safety of my ship, not having any knowledge as to what was the extent of our own damage. Others were already engaged in clearing away and launching the life boats. One of the Thingvalla's boats had just been lowered when the other steamer went down stern first. This scene was a frightful one,—I cannot attempt to describe it—some of her passengers were rushing madly about the deck while others were throwing into several boats on the water. I believe many of the passengers must have been killed in their bunks by the force of the collision and

Never Knew What Happened,

As the steamer plunged beneath the water, carrying down those on board, she capsized some boats that had got away. The air was rent with agonizing shrieks and prayers. Most of the people probably went down with the Geiser. They were followed soon after by the illfated souls in boats who must have been sucked under as the ship sank.

The Thingvalla Arrives in Bad Shape

The Danish steamer Thingvalla was signaled off the harbor at 6 this morning but three hours elapsed before she arrived at the wharf.

The Thingvalla presented a strange spectacle, with nearly her whole bow torn away leaving an immense hole exposed to view. A big piece of the bow hangs over the hole which reaches back into the sides of the ship over fifteen feet. The projecting piece hangs over the water like an arm and shows where the powerful iron plates were broken through and snapped off as if they were pipe stems. Crowds flocked to the wharf to see the steamer and wonder was expressed that she ever reached port. No persons were allowed aboard. The only statement to be obtained from the Captain was that the steamer will be examined by the port wardens and probably repaired at this place.

A Passenger's Graphic Account

NEW YORK, Aug 17. The following account was given by a young druggist named Jensen Castberg, who was on board the Thingvalla en route to Galveston.

It was just about daylight and all with the exception of myself and a few friends were asleep, when all of a sudden we heard a crashing of feet on deck and then a crunching sound. Then for a moment all was still. In a moment all of the passengers were out of their berths and all rushing for the companion way. The [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] Cleveland and Chairman Bryce.

NEW YORK, Aug. 17. An afternoon paper prints the statement that President Cleveland has ousted Chairman Calvin S. Bryce, of the National Democratic Committee, because Mr. Bryce talked too freely to newspaper correspondents. At the headquarters the story is strenuously denied, and the whole statement is characterized as a malicious falsehood. It was said that President Cleveland had no voice in the matter whatever. What if Mr. Bryce does not suit, it is an affair of the National Committee. As a contradiction to these statements it is stated that Mr. Bryce is doing very well in his position and has far exceeded the expectations of his best friends.

A Job Mr. Carlisle Had Better Not Undertake

WASHINGTON, Aug 17. The Star, this evening, has the following: A proposition is under consideration by the Democratic campaign managers to arrange for a joint discussion of the tariff by Mr. Carlisle and Mr. Blaine. It is proposed to challenge Mr. Blaine to meet Mr Carlisle and dispute the question, in alternate speeches in twelve of the principal cities of the Union, six to be named by Mr. Blaine and six by the Speaker. The opinion of a number of prominent Democratic Congressmen as to the advisability of such a course has been asked and there is a very general concurrence of approval.

Republican Rally in Vermont

WELLS RIVER, Vt., Aug 17. A large and enthusiastic Republican rally was held to-day. Although the rain prevented many from coming, it was estimated that 1,500 were present, including campaign clubs from Montpelier, Bradford, Marshfield, Newbury, Fairlee, Plainfield and Barnet.

Special trains to return the militia to their homes will leave Augusta this forenoon. The train bringing the companies for eastern Maine will arrive here at 12.45 P. M. The weather was not of the best kind for the muster, but the troops went through the usual exercises and were given a good taste of camp life. This forenoon the muster will be adjourned to another season. The reception to Governor Marble occurred last evening at Brigade headquarters.

Mr William Harrison formerly a resident of Dexter, but for a few years past Secretary and Treasurer of the Montana Central Railroad, has resigned that position to engage in other pursuits. When he came to make his settlement with the company, after disbursing over $3,000,000, there was a deficit of but two cents, which is considered a remarkable showing. Since his resignation Mr. Harrison has engaged with the Steam Power and Lighting Company, a most prosperous and thriving business.

One hundred and forty-four shakoes have arrived for the Loyal League, and the League will make their first appearance in them on Monday when they will go to Bucksport to take part in the Republican flag raising. The Bangor Band will accompany the League. The company will make a splendid appearance when in full uniform, and will undoubtedly receive unbounded applause throughout the campaign for their appearance and fine marching. They will be out in full force next Thursday upon the occasion of the great Republican celebration.

WINTERPORT PACKING COMPANY. The Winterport Packing Company have engaged as foreman Mr. J. W. Blake, of Portland, an experienced packer of fine corn. The report from farmers who have planted sweet corn for this company is very favorable, but owing to the drouth, the crop will be small in some sections. A prominent packer from the western part of the State was in town last week and reported that there were prospects of a short crop. Should this prove the case the packers who have sold ahead, will be obliged to go on the market as buyers, in order to fill their orders, which will make better prices for also canned corn.

THE GREAT MASS MEETING.

Arrangements Progressing Finely.

The various committees that have charge of the arrangements for the great mass meeting next Thursday are busily engaged and are making good progress in preparing the details. It was found yesterday that the A. O. H. excursion to Moosehead was announced for the same day as the mass meeting [illegible] the managers of the A. O. H. excursion courteously decided to change their date which will be announced hereafter. The committee on transportation has arranged for ample train service to accommodate the great number of people expected to visit the city Thursday, the time table for which will be given in due season, and the boats running into the city will also make low rates. Special trains will leave the city at the close of the great parade in the evening so that the visitors will have an opportunity to witness the evening demonstration. In addition to the general illuminations there will be fine display of fireworks along the line of march. A collation will be furnished visiting companies and every arrangement will be made for their comfort.

CHAPTER VI.

A [illegible]

If any one says I played spy, I am ready to speak up pretty strongly in my self defense, for my aim always was to do my duty by Sir John, my master, but I could not help seeing two or three things during the next fortnight, and they all had to do with a sort of [illegible] going on from one house to the [illegible] over the way, where Miss Adela generally appeared to be on the watch, and her looks always seemed to me to say "No, you mustn't think of such a thing," and to be inviting him all the time. Then, all at once, I thought I was wrong, for I went up as usual at half past 7 to take Mr. Barclay's boots and his clothes which had been brought down the night before, after he had dressed for dinner. I tapped and went in, just as I'd always done ever since he was a boy, and went across to the window and drew the curtains. "Nice morning, Master Barclay," I said. "Half-past——" There I stopped, and stared at the bed, which all lay smooth, and neat, as the housemaid had turned it down, for no one had slept in it that night. I was struck all of a heap, and didn't know what to think. To me it was just like a silver spoon or fork being missing, and setting one's head to work to think whether it was anywhere about the house.

He hadn't stopped to take his wine with Sir John after dinner, but that was nothing fresh, for they'd been very cool lately. Then I hadn't seen him in the drawing room, but that was nothing fresh neither, for he had avoided Miss Virginia for some little time.

"It is very strange," I thought, for I had not seen him go out, and then, all at once, I gave quite a start, for I felt that he must have done what Sir John had told him to do—gone.

"That won't do," I said directly after. "He wouldn't have gone like that," and I went straight to Sir John's room and told him as in duty bound, what I had found out: for Mr. Barclay was not the young man to be fast and stop out of nights and want the servants to screen him. There was something wrong I felt sure, and so I said.

"No," said the old gentleman, as he sat up in bed and then began to dress, "he wouldn't go at my wish, but that jade over the way is playing with him, and he is too proud to stand it any longer, besides being mortified at making such an ass of himself. There's nothing wrong, Burdon. He has gone, and a good job, too."

Of course I couldn't contradict my master, but I went up and examined Mr. Barclay's room to find nothing missing, not so much as a shirt or pair of socks, only his crush hat and the light overcoat from the brass peg in the front hall; and I shook my head.

Miss Virginia looked paler than ever at breakfast, but nothing more was said upstairs. Of course the servants gossiped, and so it was noticed that Mr. Barclay had done what his father had told him: a week passed away and matters settled down, with Miss Adela Mimprus sitting at the window just as usual doing worsted work, and the old house looking as grim as ever and as if a bit of paint and a man to clean the windows would have been a blessing to us all.

Every time the postman knocked Miss Virginia would start, and her eyes used to look so wild and large, that when I'd been to the little box and found nothing from Mr. Barclay, I used to give quite a gulp, and many's the time I've stood back in the dining room and shook my fist at Miss Adela sitting so smooth and handsome at the opposite house, and wished she'd been at the world's end before she came there.

CHAPTER VII.

A [illegible] DISCOVERY.

Mr. Barclay had been gone three weeks, and no news from him, and I was beginning to think he had gone off in a huff all at once, though I often wondered how he would manage for want of money, when one night, as I sat nursing Tom, I thought I'd look through my desk, that I hadn't opened for three or four years, and have a look at a few old things I'd got there—a watch Sir John gave me, but which I never wore, an old guinea, and an old gold pin, besides a few odds and ends that I'd had for many years, as I come easy. Tom didn't seem to like it, and he stared hard at the desk as I took it on my knees, opened it, lifted one of the flaps and put my hand upon the old paper which contained the statement about the old gold plate. No, I did not. I put my hand on the place where it ought to have been, but it wasn't there.

"I must have put it in the other side," I said to myself, and I opened the other lid.

Then I turned cold, and ran my hand here and there, wild like, to stop at last with my mouth open, staring. The paper was gone! So was the money, and every article of value that I had hoarded up.

For a few minutes I was too much stunned even to think, and when at last I could get my brain to work, I sat there, feeling a poor, broken, weak old man, and I covered my face with my hands and cried like a child.

To think of it!" I groaned at length—"him so handsome and so young—him whom I'd always felt so proud of—proud as if he'd been my own son. Why, it would break his father's heart if he knew. It's that cursed woman's doing." I cried savagely. "She turned his head, or he'd never have done such a cruel, base, bad act as to rob a poor old man like me." For I'd recollected lending Mr. Barclay my keys, and I felt that sooner than ask his father for money, he had taken what he could find, and gone. "Let him!" I said savagely at last. "But he needn't have stolen them. I'd have given him everything I've got. I'd have sold out the hundred pounds I've got in the bank and lent him that. But he didn't know what he was doing, poor boy. That cursed woman has turned his brain."

"Ah, well!" I said at last bitterly, "it's my secret. Sir John shall never know. He trusted me with one, and now his son"—I stopped short there, for I recollected the paper, and fell all of a tremble, thinking of that gold plate, and that some one else knew of its hiding place now, and I asked myself what I ought to do. For a long time I struggled, but at last I felt that, much as I wanted to hide Mr. Barclay's cruelly mean act, I must not keep this thing a secret. "It's my duty to tell my master," I said at last, "and I must." So I went up to where Sir John was sitting alone, pretending to enjoy his wine, but looking very yellow and old and sunken of face. "Not fretting about Master Barclay," I said to myself, and I felt that I could not tell him that the lad had taken my little treasure, but that he must know about the paper, so I up and told him only that at once, and that's why he said I was an old fool, and that it was all my fault.

"Good heavens! you old fool," he cried angrily, "what made you write such a paper? It was like telling all the world."

"I thought it would be so shocking, Sir John, if we were both to die and the things were forgotten."

"Shocking! Be a good job," he cried. "A man who has a lot of gold in his care is always miserable. Taken out of your desk, you say. When?"

"Ah, that I can't tell, Sir John. It might have been done years ago, for aught I know."

"And the old gold plate all stolen and melted down and spent. Good heavens, Burdon! [illegible] a trustworthy man. There, we must see to it at once. I shan't rest till I know it is safe."

He seemed to me then that he snatched at the chance of having something to do to take his attention off his trouble, for when I asked him if I should get a locksmith to come in, he turned upon me like a lion. "Burdon," he said, "we'll get this job done, and then I shall have to make other arrangements for you to go into an almshouse."

"Very good, Sir John," I said patiently.

"Very good," he cried, laughing now. "[illegible] you have, and we can go open to the servants have gone to bed we'll go and open the old cellar ourselves."

get through there, Burdon," he says, looking at the bricked up wall, across the way to the inner cellar.

"I don't know," I said, taking off my coat and rolling up my sleeves, to find that though the mighty price had been paid for that bricklaying, the ghost of a fellow who did the job had used hardly a bit of sand and bad lime, so that, after I had loosened one brick and levered it out, all the others came away one at a time quite clear of the mortar.

"Never mind," says Sir John. "Out of evil comes good. I'll try that sherry, too, Burdon, and we'll put some fresh in its place. But if there's left twenty years, we shall never live to taste it, eh?"

I shook my head sadly as I worked away in that arch, only reaching the top bricks, which were only six feet from the sawdust, and, as is often the case, what had seemed a terrible job proved to be so easy that two hours afterwards, when Sir John had made me open a bottle of the bricked up sherry and fill two of the cellar glasses for us to have a drop apiece, there were all the bricks in a rough pile on one side, and the sherry was in a bin, and the empty bottles stacked in a corner.

"Maybe a little foul air in the place," says Sir John, "and we'll give it a bit of time to get out. That's a very fine glass of sherry, my man," he says, taking a good long sip. "Well matured. But Sir [illegible] the old sage and [illegible] turned into liquid gold."

"My service and respects to my dear old master!" I said, as I stood before him where he sat on the pile of bricks, looking all covered with mortar and sawdust on his black dress clothes, and me the same worse, and one hand bleeding as I took a taste of the finest sherry I ever drank in my life, which is saying a deal, for Sir John would have good wine.

"Thank you, Burdon," he says in rather a husky way. "[illegible] all these years, but it's getting near the end now, when all men will be the same. I beg your pardon, Burdon—my good old fellow—I called you a fool. Shake hands."

"As you have called me many a time, my dear old master," I said, as we stood there joined in a strong grip. "But I know you, sir," I said, smiling with the tears standing thick in my eyes—"yes, I know you, sir, and I don't mind."

We neither of us spoke, for it seemed as if we both felt afraid lest the other should see how weak he was. But at last he says: "Fill up the glasses again, Burdon. Working as we have been, a good glass of wine will not hurt either you or me."

I did as he said. We drank the delicious fine old stuff slowly and solemnly, and then, after I had put the bottle and glasses aside, I snuffed the candles.

"There," he says, "the place will be sweeter now. We'll just have a glance at the old chests, and then we must build up the empty bottles again. To-morrow I'll order in some more wine—for my son."

He said that last so solemnly that I looked up at him as he stood there with the light shining in his eyes.

"He'll come back some day, sorry for the past, Sir John," I said, "and ready to do what you wish."

"Please God, Burdon!" he says, bowing his head for a bit. Then he looked up quite sharply, and took a candle, and I the other.

"Come along," he says in his old quiet, stern way, and I was half afraid I had offended him, as he stepped in at the opening and stood at the mouth of the inner cellar. Then I heard him give a sharp sniff, and I smelt it too—that same odor of burnt oil. Wondering, of us spoke as we walked over the damp, black sawdust, both thinking of the likelihood of foul air being in the place, but we found we could breathe all right, and as we held up the candles, the light shone on the black looking old chests, every one with its padlocks and seals all right, just as we had left them all those years before.

A FRIGHTFUL SKIN DISEASE

Sufferings Intense. Head nearly raw. Body covered with sores. Cured by the Cuticura Remedies.

Messrs. Stevens & Bruner, Monroe, N. C.:

Dear Sirs—About two months ago, on your recommendation, I bought a bottle of Cuticura Resolvent, one box Cuticura Salve, and one cake of Cuticura Soap, for my son aged thirteen years, who has been afflicted with eczema for a long time, and I am pleased to say that I believe the remedies have cured him. His sufferings were intense, his head being nearly raw, his ears being gone except the gristle, and his body was covered with sores. His condition was frightful to behold. The sores have now all disappeared, his skin is healthy, eyes bright, cheerful in disposition, and is working every day. My neighbors are witnesses to this remarkable cure, and the doubting ones are requested to call or write me, or any of my neighbors.

WM. S. STEPHENSON,

Winchester P. O., Union Co., N. C.

Monroe, N. C., Oct. 29, 1887.

The Potter Drug and Chemical Co.:

Gentlemen—Mr. Wm. S. Stephenson of this county brought his son to town to-day to let us see him, and to show what Cuticura Remedies had done for him. This is the case referred to in our letter to you some time ago. To look at the boy now, one would suppose that there had never been anything the matter with him,—seems to be in perfect health. We have written and herewith inclose what his father has to say about the matter—wrote it just as he dictated.

We are selling quite a quantity of Cuticura Remedies and hear nothing but praises for them. We regard the Cuticura Remedies the best in the market, and shall do all we can to promote their sale.

Yours truly, STEVENS & BRUNER, Druggists and Pharmacists.

CUTICURA, the great skin cure, and Cuticura Soap prepared from it, externally, and Cuticura Resolvent, the new blood purifier, internally, are a positive cure for every form of skin and blood disease from pimples to scrofula.

Sold everywhere. Price, Cuticura, 50c.; Soap, 25c.; Resolvent, $1.00. Prepared by the Potter Drug and Chemical Co., Boston, Mass.

Send for "How to Cure Skin Diseases," 64 pages, 50 illustrations, and 100 testimonials.
